The authors wish to acknowledge their host institutions, National Institute of Public Finance and Policy, and the Centre for Public Policy, Indian Institute of Management (Bangalore), for the full support they provided to the authors during the course of this research, including financial support for staff time. We additionally wish to thank Dr M Govinda Rao, Director of NIPFP for his full support in allowing NIPFP to serve as the administrative secretariat for the project, and for his enthusiasm and encouragement. We are also grateful to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of the U K Government for their generous support of the operational expenses of the project through their Global Opportunity Fund.

The current and past members and staff of the three regulatory commissions we have studied, in Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka and Delhi, were unfailingly courteous and gave generously of their time, attention and insights. We thank them, and express our hope that they accept this report in the reflective and forward looking spirit in which it is written. In addition, we wish to thank the numerous individuals we interviewed, from government, consulting firms, industry, NGOs, consumer organisations, and farmers groups, who shared their views and insights generously. We stress that the authors alone are responsible for the inferences we have drawn from these interviews.

Several reviewers shared their knowledge and experience with us after reading and reflecting on the material contained in this report. Sanjeev Ahluwali, Anton Eberhard and Girish Sant took time out of their own work to provide overarching comments at very short notice, which have considerably enriched the study. Each chapter was also reviewed by multiple experts familiar with the respective chapter; they are thanked by name in the appropriate chapter. We are grateful to all our reviewers. They authors have benefited from their input, but retain full responsibility for the opinions expressed and inferences drawn in this work.

This research was supported by able substantive and administrative assistance. Ashwini Swain and Seher Shah conducted research assistance in Delhi, while Sneha Tiwari and Kannababu Kurasala assisted with research in Bangalore and Hyderabad respectively. Mr Anurodh Sharma, Mr Bhalla, and Mr V M Budhiraja ably managed the administration, organisation and finances, while Mr L Gurusurthy oversaw the administrative management. Finally, we would like to thank the Macmillan team for efficiently handling the publication of this document.
